2022 Marketplace Estimate Research Study Underway

Richard Garlick and Associates Consulting and Market Research Services, LLC has begun fielding the latest research survey following field testing and a final review by the IFI Board of Directors in early April. Garlick is a special research advisor to the Incentive Research Foundation and has helped conduct numerous IRF studies on various aspects of the incentive industry.

A small group of IFI Board members, termed the Research Scoping Committee, met three times to review the 2016 study's survey and final report. The committee, comprised of Board members, Mike Donnelly, Karen Wesloh, Brian Galonek, Sean Roark, and Rick Blabolil were asked to assist in scoping the research project by reviewing the survey questions for the 2016 study and make recommendations to revise, add or delete questions based on current market and industry challenges and opportunities. All IFI Board members were given the opportunity to test the survey in advance of the launch.

Early reports from Garlick's firm indicate that we are getting the respondent characteristics that are needed to fulfill the sampling targets. The 2022 study is exploring the use of non-cash incentives in sales programs, channel programs, employee programs and customer loyalty programs and the use of award points, gift cards, trips and travel, merchandise, and experiential awards across those types of programs with the businesses surveyed. Those elements have been used in previous studies to ensure comparisons to previous studies that help measure changes, incidence, and growth more accurately, with experiential awards being added this year.

Garlick's firm has focused on maintaining consistency in survey questions to ensure accurate comparisons to earlier studies and has introduced a few new techniques to make the new study contemporary with the changes the industry has experienced during the past 7 years.

A final report will be prepared and presented approximately two weeks after the data is collected, with a proposed completion in May 2022.

Results will be shared with the IFI membership before a final white paper is released to the business community and media which is scheduled in early June.

The IRF Releases Academic Research in Action: Loss Aversion and Incentive Design in April

This study focuses on the work of economist John A. List, and his book The Voltage Effect. List advises that in designing your incentives, remember that most people dislike losing something they have approximately twice as much as they enjoy gaining something they do not. Behavioral economists call this loss aversion. With this in mind, incentive and reward designers might consider encouraging behaviors or goal-achievement by granting rewards before the hoped-for behavior/goal rather than after, on threat of revoking the reward should the behavior not materialize, or the goal not be achieved.

This counterintuitive approach works in List's and many others' experiments, because in addition to loss aversion, it taps the endowment effect. Behavioral economists have learned that once a person owns a thing – even something trivial like a coffee mug – they place greater value on it than its market worth. It also links with Prospect Theory, the phenomena in which most people avoid risks with a potential upside but accept risks when hoping to avoid an equivalent loss.

List and his collaborators have found that in field experiments where workers have several months to achieve a goal, those promised a reward at the end for doing so do not perform as well as others who receive the reward upfront, knowing they must give it back if they do not meet their goal.

IMA/RPI WEBINAR: What's Recognition Got to Do with the "Great Resignation"? - APRIL 28, 11:00 AM - 12:00 PM CDT

The pandemic created the perfect storm for employees to consider what is really important to them. This has led to many factors that have caused the "Great Resignation." The availability of flexible work arrangements, poor employee supports, toxic work cultures, and a lack of connectedness, have all contributed to the mass exodus of 4.4 million Americans quitting their jobs in September 2021. Can employee recognition practices and recognition programs help solve this problem?

Presenter Roy Saunderson, CRP, MA, Chief Learning Officer, Engage2Excel, will share insights from research studies to understand the causes for so many resignations. We will also look at the impact meaningful and effective recognition has had in influencing the "Big Quit."
